TRUMP'S election as US President is a shocking reminder that tackling racism remains one of the key challenges in our society.

Across Europe refugees are still being left to drown or to live in squalor in camps. Theresa May's attacks on freedom of movement shows the Tories' increased willingness to scapegoat migrants after Brexit.

But there has also been resistance. Thousands have taken to the streets to say racist politics have no place in our society – while race hate crimes have been met by communities coming together to reject the scapegoating.

Come to this meeting to discuss how we can build on all this to confront the rise in racism locally.
